We are going to aim high – the skies our limit!
Following in the footsteps of the great mountaineers of the world we are setting off on our own expedition of learning.

First we have to train our minds to understand the world around us and the challenges that mountaineers face. We'll study mountains and rivers around the world to equip us with the knowledge that all survivors need. We'll research modern day expeditions alongside the earliest civilizations that depended on the mountains. We'll pack our survival kit making sure we don't exceed the weight limit on our expedition and get to grips with compass and map reading skills.

Whilst trekking the world we'll discover all the artists that have depicted mountains and try our very own hand at photographing landscapes.

The fun doesn't stop there! We are going to get creative and try designing our very own survival kit – putting it through extreme tests to see how well it works.

All of this exploring makes us hungry and tired! We'll learn how to forage and rustle up our very own survival meal. Move over Bear Grylls!
